

UNIVERSIDAD AUSTRAL

Ver más allá.
Actuar ahora.

October 22, 2014

IAE Business School educates business men and women who work and compete in Latin America to help them become positive change agents. Today's challenges lead companies and business schools to delve into the essence of organizations: individuals' professional and human values. Therefore, IAE seeks to train leaders who not only perform effectively, but also include ethical, environmental, social, and human rights principles in their decisions, transforming management practice into an opportunity for personal growth.

To live up to its vision, IAE supports people and companies in the different stages of their personal and professional development –from young professionals to retired senior executives, from entrepreneurs to owners of small and medium sized companies as well as family businesses, from civil society organizations to public institutions and corporations. The school also caters to their needs with more than its academic offerings, building communities where companies and individuals can come to our school to find a place where they can think together and create new paths to improve good business practices.

IAE's business vision enriches the path to efficiency with a commitment to advancing social development. Our school embraces all six PRME principles, viewing them as key components of successful and responsible business practice. For IAE, committing to PRME principles helps to integrate them further across its programs and its organization.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'g. noussan', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Gabriel Noussan
Dean, IAE Business School

Full SIP Report will be available by the end of November 2014